The decline of modern America is the theme of this lively and provocative cultural history (of 18,186 words, or about 63-pages) titled: THE SPIRITUAL DEATH OF AMERICAN LIFE.

This book places in historical-religious context the cultural, intellectual, and social trends that transformed the USA from a civilized nation into one of discontent, loneliness, and self-destruction. (Such problems began taking root almost a century ago, had a reprieve during the conservative era of the 1950s and early-1960s, then accelerated and worsened in the past fifty years since then into the early 21st century.)

Misguided writers and intellectuals, politicians, and corporate business interests gradually abandoned traditional American values (based upon Judeo-Christianity) that once gave us a sense of personal dignity, community, and national purpose. Instead, these cultural and societal leaders (whose colorful lives and wrongheaded ideas are discussed in the book's ten chapters) have infested our culture with their own secular materialistic agenda that promotes radicalism, immorality, and disbelief in God.
